D-Tech's CEO moves to America to make waves in library market.

D-Tech's CEO, Marvin Crisp, has moved across the pond to increase the productivity of our sister company, increase the awareness of RFID technology and to educate on how patrons can get more from their library experience. Marvin started D-Tech in 2002 and it has grown to be one of the leading suppliers of high performance technology products and services for public space locations in the UK. The success of the company was built in the library sector but have been a huge influence in the increase demand of EM, RF, FIQ and RFID technologies within other sectors with regards to tracking, managing, protecting and forecasting demand.

The decision to crack the American market was made in November 2011 and has since grown with D-Tech now having over 50 installations under their belt. Marvin's move to the US is so D-Tech USA can give the same level of service and aftercare of that ok the UK Company. Marvin's move also allows him to support and invest in the company as well as supporting a new line of products. To aid the development of the US Company further D-Tech will be investing in support and new products. This, along with Marvin's thirty two years of experience in the library sector, will therefore allow D-Tech enhance the library security market and bringing it to the same technological level as the UK.

The current team supporting the US business has been handpicked by Marvin to ensure that company can give the best support as well as being extremely knowledgeable. The aim is to expand this team to aid company growth through hard work and great service. D-Tech are the only company that provides a full range of products including RIFD security, self-service kiosks, people counting solutions, vending solutions, 24 hour collections and laptop self-service.

We would like to wish Marvin the best of luck and hope that he has settled well into his new life in New Jersey.
